SOLID WOOD

A living material

Wood is a living material and since the herringbone plate is composed of smaller pieces of solid wood lying in different directions, it should be expected that small cracks will occur between these pieces. This is a very natural thing that is also experienced on e.g. herringbone floors. The cracks occur primarily because of the climate, in which the wood in a dry climate will contract and conversely expand in a more humid climate.

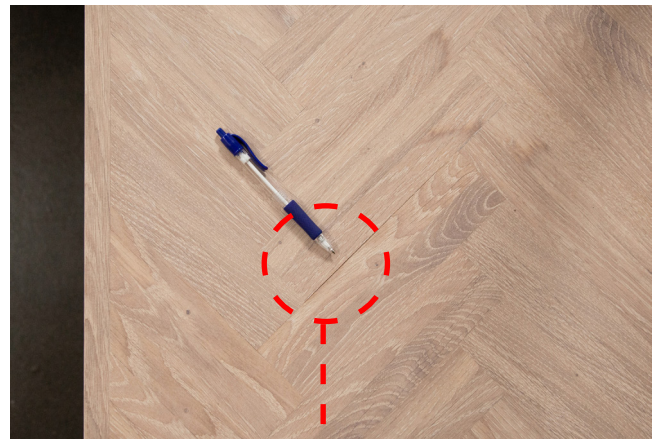

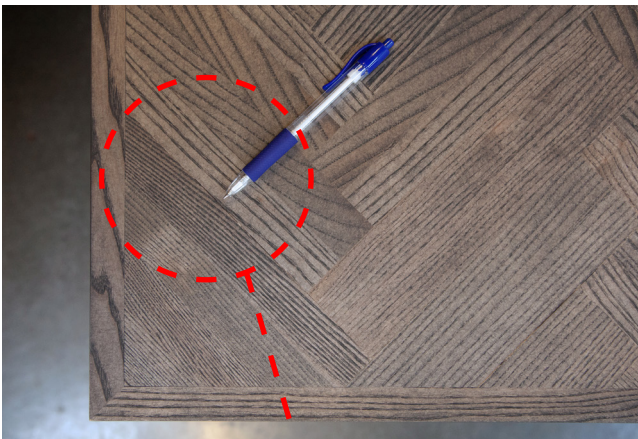

As these are relatively small cracks this is not accepted as a claim. If you want to reduce the visibility of the cracks on a dark table, you can sand it lightly and oil the table again with our oil colours, then the cracks will become coloured and appear smaller. We also recommend that the table is continuously treated with a suitable care oil to add moisture to the table.

Find the right care solution with our guide on the website:
